

No Diamond Ring

Brianna Lea Pruett

Music Video Treatment

Submitted by Civic Center Studios
Director: Thomas Moore

Revised April 23, 2012

Treatment

The song, "No Diamond Ring" essentially is a long list of things that the singer, Brianna doesn't need. No diamond ring, no castle on the hill, no limousine to know that "he loves her." All that she needs is the air they're breathing.

We will put Brianna in a small, run-down room filled to the brim with stuff. All kinds of knick-knacks and various material possessions. It would be all of those things that people collect to make themselves feel OK or loved. Little collectible figurines, a closet full of cheesy sweatshirts, a flat-screen TV, maybe an X-Box. An equal amount of the items would be arty ephemera like a mannequin head wearing a pair of earmuffs. The room would be art directed and look really cool with all of this junk.

As we push in the walls themselves will pull loose and float off revealing an empty white sky behind them. Once they're gone and as the song progresses we'll see all of the various items start to lift up and float away, blowing and floating and slowly rotating away into the white void. As the end of the video approaches we'll be left with nearly nothing at all in the room. Just Brianna sitting on the edge of the bed singing the song.

She'll stand up off of the bed and it too will float away. Finally, she'll lift her guitar up to the heavens and it will float up into the sky.

She'll be left in a white, empty space up in the clouds, up in the air in comforting nothingness. Lastly, a lanky lumberjack type will walk onto the set and the pair will kiss.

Thank you.